Mike woke up early on a Saturday in Austin, Texas. The sun was shining brightly through his window, making the room warm. He got out of bed at 9:03 AM, thinking it was a perfect 5 time to go shopping for groceries before the heat set in.

He took a shower quickly, chose his clothes: jeans, a light blue t-shirt, and sneakers. He picked up his reusable bags, keys, wallet, and water bottle, 10 because staying hydrated is important in Texas.

Mike stepped outside, feeling the warmth on his skin. He walked over to his old truck in the parking lot, where the smell of blooming flowers filled the air. He got into the truck, started the 15 engine, and drove off.

The drive to the grocery store was short and sweet. He took the quieter streets, passing by gardens and kids playing. He arrived at H-E-B, a well-known Texas grocery store. The parking lot 20 was filling up, but he managed to find a spot.

Inside, the store was busy, but he grabbed a cart and headed to the produce section first. He chose avocados, tomatoes, and cilantro, checking each for freshness. He moved on to the meat 25 section, picking out beef and chicken.

He went through the dairy aisle, selecting cheese and eggs. In the pantry section, he added chips, sauce, and jelly to his cart. He also picked up some local wines, appreciating Texas's wine scene.

30 Mike ran into some neighbors, exchanging greetings and small talk about football and local events. The community feel was strong here.

At the checkout, the cashier, who recognized him, scanned his items while they 35 chatted.

Mike pushed his cart out into the bright
Texas morning, loaded his groceries into the truck, and drove back home. The heat was starting to make the day hot.

40 Back at his apartment, he unloaded the groceries, put away everything, and thought about making guacamole. He felt good about his morning, enjoying the simple joys of life in Texas.
