

Ricardo lives in Porto Alegre, a big city in Brazil. He is 32 years old and has always dreamed of opening his own bistro. Ricardo loves food and enjoys cooking at home for his friends and family. Every weekend, he tries new recipes. Last month, he decided it was time to take his dream seriously. He wants to create a cozy and charming place where people can enjoy delicious food and relax.

Now, Ricardo is planning everything carefully. First, he needs to find the perfect location. He is looking for a small space in the city center where many people walk and work. Last Saturday, he visited a few places. One spot looked great, but it was too expensive. Now, he is thinking about a second location, which is cheaper and has nice, big windows.

Ricardo also spends a lot of time thinking about the menu. He wants to offer simple, delicious dishes made with fresh ingredients. He is planning to serve breakfast, lunch, and snacks. He thinks about including items like salads, sandwiches, and pasta. For dessert, he wants to serve cakes and cookies. He also plans to make fresh coffee, juices, and a few cocktails. Last week, he tested a new recipe for a chocolate cake. His family tried it and loved it, so he decided to add it to the menu.

Another important part of Ricardo's plan is hiring staff. He knows he cannot run the bistro alone. He needs a chef to help him in the kitchen, a server to take care of customers, and someone to clean. Ricardo wants friendly, hardworking people who enjoy food and know how to talk to customers. Yesterday, he interviewed two people for the chef position. He is still thinking about who is the best choice.

Right now, Ricardo is working hard every day to make his dream come true. He wakes up early to make plans, write down ideas, and search for good suppliers. He buys fresh fruits and vegetables from local farmers, and he visits the bakery to taste different types of bread. Ricardo feels excited but also nervous because there is still a lot to do.

In a few months, Ricardo hopes to open his bistro and welcome his first customers. He believes his bistro will be a special place in Porto Alegre. He thinks people will come to relax, enjoy good food, and spend time with friends. Ricardo's family and friends support him and are proud of his dedication. They know he is working hard and they believe in his dream.
